Preface

The field of Broadcasting and Journalism is undergoing a significant transformation, shaped by the growth of digital platforms and evolving media technologies. Today's media professionals must possess a solid grounding in journalistic principles alongside the adaptability to thrive in a fast-changing digital environment.

The B.Voc (Honours) Programme in Broadcasting and Journalism, offered by Mahatma Gandhi University, is designed to address this need. This four-year honours programme goes beyond traditional models by offering an interdisciplinary and industry-oriented curriculum that blends theory with practice. It provides in-depth exposure to core areas such as broadcasting media

, digital media production, mobile and data journalism, transmedia storytelling, marketing communication, script writing, media research, and film studies.

The curriculum includes a range of components—Discipline Specific Core and Electives (SDC/SDCE), Multi-Disciplinary Courses (MDC), Skill and Ability Enhancement Courses (SEC/AEC), Value Added Courses (VAC), and Capstone Projects. This structure ensures holistic learning and career readiness.

The programme follows an Outcome-Based Education (OBE) approach, focusing on measurable learning outcomes that develop critical thinking, media literacy, and practical competence. Students will engage in hands-on learning through workshops, projects, and internships, preparing them for real-world challenges in the media industry.

This syllabus document outlines the academic framework, course structure, learning outcomes, and evaluation methods of the programme. We believe this initiative will empower students to become responsible communicators, skilled storytellers, and future-ready professionals.

The Board of Studies in Mass Communication and Journalism extends its sincere thanks to all contributors involved in the curriculum design and development process.
